

The Mark of Cain {Illustrated}

Judge Hoyts strong, keen face took on a kindlier aspect and his curt Hello! was followed by gentler tones, as he heard the voice of the girl he loved, over the telephone. What is it, Avice? he said, for her speech showed anxiety. Uncle Rowly, he hasnt come home yet. He hasnt? Well, I hope hell turn up soon. I want to see him. I was coming up this evening. Come now, said Avice; come now, and dine here. I am so anxious about uncle. Why, Avice, dont worry. He is all right, of course. No he isnt. I feel a presentiment something has happened to him. He never was so late as this before, unless we knew where he was. Do come right up, wont you, Judge? Certainly I will; Im very glad to. But Im sure your fears are groundless. What about Mrs. Black? Is she alarmed? No, Eleanor laughs at me. Then I think you neednt disturb yourself. Surely she Yes, I know what youre going to say, but she isnt a bit fonder of Uncle Rowly than I am. Good-by. Avice hung up the receiver with a little snap. She was willing that Mrs. Black should marry her uncle, but she did hate to be relegated to second place in the household. Already the handsome widow was asserting her supremacy, and while Avice acknowledged the justice of it, it hurt her pride a little. Ive asked Judge Hoyt to dinner, she said, as she returned to her post at the window. Mrs. Black glanced up from the evening paper she was reading and murmured an indistinct acquiescence. It was late June, yet the city home of the Trowbridges was still occupied by the family. As Avice often said, the big town house was cooler than most summer resorts, with their small rooms and lack of shade. Here, the linen-swathed furniture, the white-draped chandeliers and pictures, the rugless floors, all contributed to an effect of coolness and comfort. Avice, herself, in her pretty white gown, fluttered from one window to another, looking out for her uncle. Mrs. Black, why do you suppose Uncle Rowly doesnt come? He said he would be home early, and its after six oclock now! I dont know Avice, Im sure. Do be quiet! You fluster around so, you make me nervous. Im nervous myself, Eleanor. Im afraid something has happened to uncle. Do you suppose he has had a stroke, or anything?
