Here are 23 articles averaging 1000 words each - A year after Mums death, we decided, after much discussion, that the most fitting tribute that we could make would be one that had its feet firmly embedded in practicality as well as literature. Bessie Mary Dzielski was a librarian for her whole life. Although she never succeeded in writing a novel, she submitted countless articles to various magazines and was regularly published. She died in 2008 at the age of 83, after which we found a box full of unpublished articles amongst her effects. Consequently, we offer here, the first and probably only edition of Bess selected articles written over approximately 45 years 1960 to 2005.

Around a third of these articles are about individuals such as C.S. Lewis, Dorothy L. Sayers, Emily Wilding-Davison. Others include offerings on lip-reading (Stand Still and Face the Light), a visit to a Status Quo concert (Rock On, Mum), learning to drive at the age of 50 (The Open Road) and the life of Jane Austens Fitzwilliam Darcy (Dearest Lizzie). Incidentally, our good friend Colin Dexter O.B.E., the creator of Inspector Morse, commented about Mums essay on the English poet A.E. Housman shortly after learning of her death, saying; Oh, that is such a shame. That was a beautifully written piece of prose. It is so refreshing to read a piece about Housman that does not automatically feel the need to allude to his sexuality. My sincere condolences. Praise, indeed. Having found and catalogued over 100 offerings (some of which were on 50 year old carbon copies) - it took us a considerable amount of time, as you can imagine, to decide on the best formula for selection. In conclusion, then, we have tried to reflect Mums personal interests as a long-time librarian whilst, hopefully, maintaining the interest of yourself, the reader. I hope you feel that we have succeeded. Nick and Susan Masters (author of The Passing of
